THE ECW CONFERENCE

Over the past 15 years, the Energy, Creative Collaboration and Wellbeing (ECW) conferences have developed a design that incorporates events from classic Group Relations together with a somatic understanding of the body in motion and awareness of the environment in which life takes place - an ecological approach that also invites participation through the senses.

The unifying principle of these original and unique Conferences is mens sana in corpore sano (healthy mind in healthy body). ECW proposes that, through the awareness of the body and its needs, it is possible and healthy to connect with the earth and its resources, being aware of the interdependence between all its parts.

Today more than ever, in a post-pandemic world, with wars and climate crisis, it is essential to rediscover the dimension of the body, the relationship with nature, which is a free resource.

WHO IS THE CONFERENCE FOR

The conference is for those from diverse walks of life who are interested in understanding groups, organisational dimensions, and evolutionary levels present in the social contexts of our personal and professional lives.

In particular, it is aimed at those who want to make the best and most sustainable use of existing resources and bring new thinking and well-being into their lives and the organisations in which they work.

The experiences proposed during the conference allow participants will experience and reflect on these issues and the possibility of creatively collaborating on a common task, in the different roles of leader and follower.

ECW is a work in progress and a fertile ground for action-research in the field of Group Relations Conferences: we recommend, to those who have already participated, to repeat the experience and register to deepen the learning and develop the ability to apply it in the context of their own lives.

Deepening Integration Group (DIG)

This edition of ECW includes up to four places reserved for the DIG: an in-depth path that helps to understand the conscious and unconscious processes and dynamics that develop in the GRC and to deepen one's ability to recognise and manage them.

The DIG is aimed at those who have already attended at least one, preferably two GRCs and are interested in further developing this type of learning and then applying it in their professional life.

FEEDBACK FROM PARTICIPANTS

"An experience that has changed me, left me with some food for thought for my working and personal life. I have met fantastic people, the conference format is magical."

"It has contributed to reflect on human nature and the different behaviors people display around work and leadership... I understood better the mind body connections, which are often neglected."

"It is one of the most formative and comprehensive experiences I have had. For months afterwards, stimuli and reflections remain in the mind that help in private life and work."

"The role of the body is vastly under-utilized in conferences here in the U.S. and I was so happy to be able to bring all parts of me to the conference [...] I don't think that [in other explorations] the whole person and system is accessed as completely as was the case in ECW..."

BACKGROUND

The tradition of Group Relations Conferences, born out of the encounter between psychoanalysis and systems thinking, has led to the development of extraordinary ideas and insights concerning unconscious collective thoughts, images, emotions, anxieties, defences and the impact these have on the system's ability to 'stick to the task'.

ECW proposes a Group Relation Conference where its methodology, practised internationally for more than 75 years, is developed through an integrated approach to the individual and their dynamic and sustainable relationships with their life, the organisation where he/she works and the environment. Authority, leadership, role and organisation - the traditional focus of a Group Relation Conference - will be studied within this broader perspective.

THE PRIMARY TASK

In the 20th century, studies in physics and contemporary science have shown "that the world appears as an interconnected network of relationships whose parts can be defined through their connection to the whole" (F. Capra, P. L. Luisi 2014). This discovery resonates with the concept of interdependence, a heritage of spiritual knowledge and traditions from antiquity to the present day.

The primary task of this conference is to explore how resource awareness, energy and creative collaboration can introduce well-being into life and work.

The implicit challenge in the work we are proposing is to broaden the scope of our attention to the manifestations of the unconscious, observing the languages of bodies and voice in space, of energy fields, of nature.

During the events, we will explore the concepts of interdependence and relatedness. ECW connects to the socio-cultural context, nature, and the dialogues between nature and humans.

METHODOLOGY

The conference is a temporary organization shaped by the collaboration of the participants and of the staff. Residence is required: it is part of the learning. This method requires self-reflection and encourages a free spirit of action-research and thinking.

STRUCTURE

The working conference design presents the traditional events of Group Relations Conferences such as plenaries, large group, social dreaming matrix, institutional event, review and application groups, with specific events that explore the language of the arts, the moving body in space, and the voice. It is possible to request the conference programme.
