

Annysa Polanco is a first-generation Dominican American, mom of two, deeply committed to intergenerational healing . She is the Director of Learning, Equity and Workplace Culture at the Museum of Modern Art and a certified travel advisor. A Macro Social Worker by training, Annysa's work focuses on people-centered change management and organizational development and spans across the nonprofit, corporate, higher education, and cultural institution sectors. Her expertise lies in facilitation, strategic planning, and systemic and group analysis. Annysa serves as the current Vice President on the Board of the A. K. Rice Institute for the Study of Social Systems and she is a member of the New York Center.